'The decisions are governed by something I can't really put into words. I've selected things that I love by dint of their poetry, their beauty, their refusal, their internal logic and, above all, their power. Whether through images, objects or actual text, each artist here invents the language they need and there is magic in it.'

— Lynette Yiadom-Boakye

Now open at Leeds Art Gallery, Hayward Gallery Touring presents To Improvise A Mountain, an exhibition curated by Lynette Yiadom-Boakye, one of the foremost painters working today. For this exhibition, Yiadom-Boakye selects works that have been critical to her way of seeing and thinking, inviting audiences around the UK on a personal journey across different geographies and generations of artists.

First coming to prominence in the early 2010s, Yiadom-Boakye is an artist and a writer who is renowned for her oil paintings of imagined subjects. Assertive presences who yet seem to exist outside of any definable time or place, her figures are hailed for both their technical mastery and lingering, enigmatic quality.

Developed by the artist in collaboration with Hayward Gallery Touring, To Improvise A Mountain brings Yiadom-Boakye's work into conversation with a range of historical and contemporary artists, illuminating her creative process. The spirit of the exhibition stems from a fragment of poetry in 'Inamorata', a 1970 recording by jazz musician Miles Davis: 'Who is this music that which description may never justify? / Can the ocean be described?' For Yiadom-Boakye, poetry's ability to translate the intangible into images, and to think through rhythm and feeling, is similar to the act of painting.

Yiadom-Boakye expands: 'My use of words in writing is not always so different to my use of brush marks in painting. The logic, patterns, relationships and decisions are guided by intuition and a means of thinking through what is felt. That's how I wanted to approach this show. And I wanted to bring together works by artists whose vision beguiles me: fellow poets, dreamers, thinkers and wanderers. It is humbling and a dream to show amongst them.'

To Improvise A Mountain invites audiences on a journey of encounters with artworks that create emotional landscapes of intensity, intimacy, refusal, activism, and wonder. For Yiadom-Boakye, 'the governing principle, the dialogue between the works, is that spirit of infinite knowledge and infinite knowing that poetry allows us'.

Featured artists include: Bas Jan Ader, Pierre Bonnard, Lisa Brice, Barbara Chase-Riboud, Samuel Fosso, Peter Hujar, Kahlil Joseph, Zoe Leonard, Glenn Ligon, Toyin Ojih Odutola, The Otolith Group, Jennifer Packer, Paul Mpagi Sepuya, Walter Sickert, Édouard Vuillard, David Wojnarowicz, and Lynette Yiadom-Boakye.

Brian Cass, Senior Curator of Hayward Gallery Touring, says: "Lynette Yiadom-Boakye brings us on an imaginative journey of encounters with artworks that - like her remarkable paintings - conjure different moods, personalities, colour and emotions. Her curation celebrates the imaginative spirit of the contributing artists, and the endless potential of art to bring new thinking and feeling into existence, continuing Hayward Gallery Touring's longstanding history of partnering with artists on ambitious exhibitions that invite audiences inside their worlds."

Jane Bhojroo, Principal Keeper of Leeds Art Gallery, says: "Leeds Art Gallery is delighted to be collaborating with Hayward Gallery Touring and the remarkable artist Lynette Yiadom-Boakye to premiere this visionary exhibition in Leeds. It promises to be a wonderful opportunity to present artworks by internationally renowned artists from across the globe, from the late 19th century to the present day, including celebrated paintings and drawings by Walter Sickert from the Leeds Museums and Galleries collection".

To Improvise A Mountain: Lynette Yiadom-Boakye Curates is a Hayward Gallery Touring exhibition curated by Lynette Yiadom-Boakye with Hayward Gallery Touring. The exhibition is developed in partnership with Leeds Art Gallery, MK Gallery, and Nottingham Castle, supporting the Southbank Centre's ongoing mission to create experiences for the nation's enjoyment.
